Hypothetical examples or projections will be presented at times. Limitations of hypothetical examples include that they are prepared with the benefit of either perfect hindsight or idealized supposition, irrespective of financial risk. Another limitation is their inability to account for the emotional or financial state of any particular market participant. As such, they should especially be considered only of benefit for their informational and educational value, and nothing more.

SPECIFIC TECHNICAL ANALYSIS DISCLOSURE/DISCLAIMER

PHILOSOPHY AND PRACTICE OF TECHNICAL ANALYSIS

Rohr International, Incorporated (RII) maintains a long held view that technical analysis is a contingency planning tool for developing expectations of which price levels are more critical than not regarding the evolution of price trends. Some technical projections are more reliable and decisive than others; none are guaranteed. As such, technical analysis signals will NOT definitively articulate which way prices are going to proceed. Rather, they are instructive as to what the market is supposed to be doing at a particular price level and time. It is up to the analyst, funds manager or investor to determine through training and experience whether near term price activity is consistent with signal(s), or more likely failing. However, even failure of a technical signal can be an insight as well, which RII refers to as a "negation": it implies prices are likely to trend opposite to the rote signal direction, even if that is also not guaranteed.

Context of Analysis

The RII discussion and analysis of overall market conditions contains a significant degree of technical analysis indications. While technical analysis is an accepted analysis method, it is not infallible, and RII makes no specific or general guarantee of market behavior or profitable performance in the markets based upon general background, specific market history, or the price trend potentials and analysis techniques reviewed in any particular service or product. While price data and economic indicator histories are secured from reliable sources, no specific warranty as to accuracy or completeness is given or implied by their use.

All RII subscribers either are or should be well aware that all investing or trading in any cash markets or derivative financial instruments such as futures and options entails a high degree of risk, and RII assumes no liability whatsoever for decisions to implement market positions made by any individual who accesses RII services and products. To illustrate a point regarding either current conditions or potential future market activity, at some points RII services and products will specify particular price levels on cash or derivative instruments that seem critical to the price trend. To be perfectly clear, this is neither an offer to buy nor a solicitation to sell securities, nor a trading recommendation, and no guarantee of profitable performance or avoidance of loss is implied. RII provides no brokerage services, and has no funds under management.
